THE CAMPUS BUILDS CHARACTER
A professor in a Southern institution said recently that despite the previous surmisings, in his opinion the most critical time in any man's life is between 17 and 22, the period at which those who are so fortunate are attending college. But it does not take a professor or a prophet to say this and get off with it. Nothing is more conspicuous to an unbiased observer than the latitude of college men. There are factors alive and moving over every college campus, that represent practically every type of the human race, from the maliciously-mischievous to the grandest type of young man. Carolina is no exception to the principle.

It takes a man to go thru college and not be affected by the disparaging conditions which surround him. It is indeed gratifying to note the general high standard of morals that exist on the campus this year. In a conversation recently, a gentleman living in the neighborhood of the University said that never during the twenty years in which he has been associated with the University has there been a more gentlemanly, more highly moral crowd of young men attending this college than at the present time. Just to the excellence of our faculty, maybe to the fact that the world after all is getting better.

The fact remains that the young men of this State are reaching a point where they can master their own fates and captivate their own souls. The campus is getting to be a breeding place personality, and after all this is the leading factor in solving the problems of life. To be sure it cannot change the inheritance of nature, but can turn that into some account. It cannot change your five feet eleven into six feet but it can make every inch of you an inch of man.

Whether a man be richly endowed or moderately talented, his success will depend on the use he makes of faculties God has given him. That campus is an infant world, a facsimile of that which will follow.

DELYED PUBLICATION
The GAMECOCK regrets that on account of a lack of space it was unable to print a account of the the Prohibition conviction on schedule time. We beg leave of our readers to print it this week, not as news but as a matter of record, and out of compliment to the other colleges represented here.
