Our Honor Principle

Here at Carolina you are considered a gentleman until proven otherwise. Then you are asked to see if you are connected with the school. As long as you are here, we trust and honor you and only ask that you honor yourself. Isn't that little enough to ask of one?

There are no monitors here. Your tests and examinations are perfectly open, and the professors all respect the honor system of Carolina. They have little to gain by it, but you have nearly everything. You are as free in the classroom as upon the campus.

We charge that dishonesty no one knows it but yourself. If you have no respect for yourself don't feel that person, whose name is YOU, into believing that others won't find it out soon enough and treat you accordingly. If there is anything worse than a man lacking a conscience and self respect, don't bring it around. We can't imagine a concept worse or lower.

It may be hard for new men to understand a condition as it exists at Carolina and he may find it hard to combat the temptation to plainly cheat, but once he does and asserts himself, then that one will develop and grow until he finds it is no harder honestly than any other way.

The Honor Principle lives at Carolina. Help to keep it here.

The Gamecock's Welcome

The Gamecock is glad to be back on the campus and just as glad to see you all with us. We are starting in with the determination of helping to make this the greatest year in the history of this old institution. We expect every student on the campus to join in accomplishing this object. Never before has Carolina had the opportunities to get together that she has at the present time. Cooperation in the one necessary for progress and growth. Do your share and we will put 1927 over big.
