A Call For Space

If someone who is particularly familiar with this University were to attempt to make a list of those things most needed to bring it absolutely up to the standard of many of the larger universities, probably the difficulty would lie in the selection of those that should appear top of the list.

It would be reasonable to think that at the very top would come an adequate "appropriation" writer in huge bold-faced letters.

It is very likely that by having one need fulfilled many of the problems would be solved.

Probable the second "need" would be more difficult to solve. However, among those that should be most considered most needed, is a permanent office for the campus publications, The Carolinaian and The Gamecock.

With no reflection on the present printing company whatever, because it is not paid to furnish an office such as is needed and is only by courtesy that the staffs are allowed to use the place at all, the conditions under which the staffs must work are totally unfit for the purpose.

Typesetters must be carried back and forth from the rooms each week, which is neither very beneficial to the carrier or the typesetter. The noise and cleaner of the machinery lynch a great deal of disturbance for the workers and even more so for the students.

The lack of desks and chairs. It is very unseemly for a work to work hours training a desk or stand waiting for someone to finish with a typesetter, when very often everyone should be working at top speed.

Frequently students not connected with the publications wish to make contributions, it being both their duty and their privilege to do so, but they are never certain where to leave them in order that they may reach publication. For this reason the provision is made for the staff if it is wished to work at night, which is often necessary the evening before going to press. As of office of this kind would [ ] furnishing which would allow the staffs could hold their meetings.

The sum requested to equip such an office would be very small and the acquisition of the room would probably be only a matter of getting one of those that are at present occupied by some social club.
