A War To The Death

University students are engaged in a desperate war to preserve both their dignity and their good looks.

Every night when you go to bed, the顺夜 mosquito sings round your ears.

So cheerful and bright,
Comes in and stays.

The mosquitoes; there is nothing you can do about it either.

You have paid your room rent for the semester; and find yourself pleasantly anticipating a good night's rest when you see the first mosquito. It would be advisable to ask for physical education credit you could sign up a slip each night you were awakened by the pesky insects (those who have an extra hour or two might try playing around your ear, and the bed bugs might try playing around your ankle). You can take your pick.

The mosquitoes, originating in mostly stagnant ponds of water, swarm over the screens until they are swarmed from the living rooms, the bedrooms, the bathrooms, and the halls. Almost every one of them is so large that you can see it when you are about half asleep.

You would work the required number of hours to save up for a pair of mosquito netting. But not a thing.

We Wonder Why?

Library workers push poor students to the back of their stacks. The last day of their allotted time goes by, and they are left in the dark as to what to do next. It is the result of a short-sighted policy of the library administration.

We asked several students to describe their college experience and the one thing they would change if they could.

"I wish the library were open later," said one student.

"I wish they had more books," said another.

"I wish they had a better catalog," said a third.

Deliberately you murder him and once more Rise among your dream embalmers,1 crystallize by the nightmare.

Everywhere the bed clothes touch
you, there is that ticklish tingle.

Your imagination is lures you,

the bags you pursue you.

Overhead circles one squadron after the others. Their belts tighten and they are all ready to Almost immediately after you drift into a wits, and then are gone.

the whole army stakes your sign and you wake to find your roommate juggling you in the

in your new dormitory.

You dress, and proceed to your day's classes.

luckily sit down in with a sigh and

and open.

The professor takes one glance at your head

Then you are an innocent victim of a combined mosquito and

Running Off At The Mouth

It is interesting and sometimes amusing to the American people with is a question concerning the about women. There is a great deal of talk about it in Italy and Ethiopia.

"I am not going to war," says one and the other: "I am going to war," declares another.

We can see that it is a battle of wills.

"Well, that may be true, but I would rather have a little less money than to have my head shot off," of another. "It would be better, but I'm not a coward." The problem that they are facing is that war is a privilege that is granted to the

Some say they would rather spend their time in jail. In all probability, they would rather spend their time fighting for the so that they can support their families.

We hope to get into it. I think we need a good war.

The American people arrive at

Columbia College Help To Serve (CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE)

Carolina To-day

JOEL ROBERTS PIVOIT, PH.D.

American, English, and Latin.

Ripley, Duke University.

One of the most important figures in the history of higher education, Dr. Pivoit, has been a leader in the development of American libraries.

Of all the new books that have come out this summer and are listed in the library, there is a group of books that are worth special mention.

The first group consists of biographies of some of the great figures in American history.

The second group consists of histories of the various states of the Union.

The third group consists of works on the geography and history of the world.

The fourth group consists of works on the philosophy and history of religion.

The fifth group consists of works on the arts and sciences.

The sixth group consists of works on the social sciences.

We hope to hear from you soon.

WHAT'S WHAT IN UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day

Carolina To-day