Perrin Kennedy Gets Exclusive

The ringing of a telephone disturbed the shallow slumber of Perrin Kennedy, columnist in charge of the New York Herald Tribune's column on movies. Kennedy, who is frequently awakened in the middle of the night, said: "This is a special assignment. I will remain in bed."

Kennedy, who is a confirmed insomniac, was surprised to find that he had not yet got out of bed. He looked out the window and saw that it was still dark outside. He knew that he had overslept, but he was not too worried. He had been known to stay up all night before, and he was used to it. He got up and dressed, and then sat down at his desk to write his column for the Herald Tribune.

Vigilantes

I am really glad I am not a vigilante. I have read about vigilantes in the news and I have heard about their activities. They have been known to take the law into their own hands and do whatever they want to do. I don't think that is a good idea. It is better to let the police do their job and not have vigilantes running around causing trouble.

Question-Of-The-Week

When people are asked what they think about the government, their answers are not always the same. Some people think that the government is doing a good job, while others believe that it is not doing enough. In your opinion, what is the most important issue that the government should address? Why?
