First Council's Proposal Revealed

Student Council has released the following statement prior to the fall assembly on Tuesday, September 30th. The statement revealed the following:

The new University of South Carolina science building, currently under construction at a cost of $720,000, will look like this when completed. This building was designed by Gilmer Puffett of Columbia, who studied design at the Yale school of fine arts. Although the contract calls for a total of $300,000, the University has $120,000 in reserve, and the M. C. Scott Construction Company of Columbia was awarded the contract.

The building will be occupied by science departments, and it will be used by the departments of geology, biology and chemistry and the school of Pharmacy. [UCON Service Plan]

Society Condemns Freshman Hazing

Hazing should not be considered as a standard practice at the university, and the student body should consider the need for a change in the attitudes of the student body, the statement requests that the Athletic Council consider changing the dress regulations for football games.

The victory of the athletic department over the hazing of new students by the football camp is given for the improvement of the student body. There are now no more hazing incidents in the school.

High Holy Days To Be Observed Here By Jewish Students

Jewish students will begin their observance of the High Holy Days today. The beginning of the day of Atonement, which comes on Monday, is a time of rejoicing, but one of the day is devoted to self-reflection and self-judgment in the presence of God.

The day of Atonement (Yom Kippur) will be observed by Orthodox Jews and Reform Jews, as well as by the non-Jewish students. The day is 12 hours long.
