In this case the political interests of the state fall into the category of those who feel that if people don't know the facts they can be undermined or some other harm is possible.

The instigation of the border has raised the awareness of the Georgians on the segregation issue. They don't want to just prevent one, there are frequent demonstrations that also want to prevent any discussion of it. Whether segregation is right or wrong is an ongoing question.

The University of Georgia set up the board to "supervise editorial opinion expressed in the publication." If you have to request permission, it can be regulated.

Lament of a Junior

Dear Mr. McElveen,

I have just finished reading the two articles on the University and the students' attitudes at USC. There were some interesting points, but I would like to make a few comments. In my opinion, the students are becoming more critical of every aspect of the university. They feel that their opinions are not being heard and that the administration is not addressing their concerns.

Many students feel that the university is not doing enough to promote diversity and inclusivity. They are concerned about the lack of representation of minority groups in leadership positions and the lack of diversity in the curriculum. They feel that the university is not doing enough to support students from disadvantaged backgrounds.

I believe that the university needs to do more to address these concerns. It is important that the administration listen to the students' voices and take action to address their concerns. The students are the ones who are being directly affected by the university's policies and decisions, and they have the right to be heard.

Thank you for your attention to this issue.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
