Beautification Program Spreads Over Campus Like Ole Spring Fever

By DEW JAMES

Carolina's beautification program is greening, blossoming, and spreading that annual vernal spring fever over the campus.

The program was begun two years ago. The late Albert Schellenberg, landscape architect for the South Carolina Department of Forestry, Parks Division, directed most of the landscaping, and for the past year was responsible for the laying out of the gardens by the Agriculture Building and at Litchfield Hall.

The laying out of walks and the installation of the shrubbery is also part of the beautification program. Almost all of the areas are now watered by the new sprinkler system.

President Russell contributed a large number of the plants and the rest mostly for the beautification program. Dean of Administration, William H. Patterson, anticipates that the existing azalea beds will expand rapidly enough to supply plants for selling new beds.

Assistance will be used in the laying of the gravel to surround the Saturburs, the new student union building, and the area immediately cleared on Hunter Street for the expansion of the School of Education.

Maintenance Crew

Paul H. Cole is directly in charge of the beautification crew. The eight-man crew is responsible for making the landscaping, and the general upkeep of the grounds.

Napoleon, Religion

We were asked about the rights of Negroes in America, and why we had individuals. We were asked about our political affiliations, the difference between Democrats and Republicans. We were asked about the religious interests of the Nation, and the United States, and were asked if we believe in God. When these questions were presented to the jury, they were all answered, as far as we could, by the answers we had given.

As a man defending us before the Russians, we had difficulty in explaining the difference between the American and Russian philosophies. We found that what we had found, and what we thought was an important issue.

Beyond all the talk we had with students, we never could get the philosophy right way around, with any of them to determine if there were any differences.

At some point, we decided we would answer and say we would speak for all students of the South Dakota. When we asked how we could speak for a student, a thousand miles away, we would respond that all students have the same thoughts on important issues.

Cohen To Speak

To Poetry Society Tuesday, April 20

Hening Cohen, director of the University News Service and author of "The South Carolina Gazetteer, 1770-1778," a publication of the University Press, will address the Poetry Society of South Carolina on Tuesday, April 20, in Charleston. His subject will be "The Poetry in Charleston before the Revolution." Although it is not generally known, a great body of secular verse was written in South Carolina before the Revolution. Most of the best poems in the files of common periodicals, particularly the South Carolina Gazetteer, also appeared in local and distant, English and American magazines, sometimes engraved on tombstones. The talk will be illustrated by examples of the verse and will include several fragments of poetry from Indian origin by groups in France by early Huguenot exiles as well as a variety of verses in English. Dr. Cohen's interest in southern colonial poetry is an outgrowth of his research for his book, "The South Carolina Gazetteer, 1770-1778." The Poetry Society was founded in 1930 through the joint efforts of the University of South Carolina, the South Carolina Historical Society, Mrs. Howard Otis, and Mrs. Avery Hollingsworth.

T. W. Hoffacker, the university librarian, has announced that he will give a preview of the Mechanics' Institute baseball team for the past three years.
