Confederate Short Stories Are Released By University Press

“New Confederate Short Stories,” the most recent spring book from University Press is a collection of big-name, big-modern writers. The book appeared before the public of Confederate Memorial Day, celebrated by North and South Carolina on May 10. Selected from manuscripts and stories the stories represent the voice of the Civil War and Confederacy only as history is written, and the presence of the period for contemporary Americans. None of the contributors have previously appeared in an anthology.

Nationalknown Writers

The writers include a number of national reputations. Among the contributors are James Conner, publisher Prine’s Private Library of 1944; Herbert Zirben, well-known for his stories and in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines. James Robert, author of a recent best seller on the Civil War; and Frances Gay Pulley, best known for her sketches of Southern life appearing in The New Yorker.

Witty Remarks Enliven Telephone Calls to Campus Dormitories

By DEW JAMES

The person who telephones the Carolina dorms may be greeted by an answer from “General Pharmacy School,” which is “Rudy P Scholars.”

The College YMCA of Winthrop is at the moment in the midst of a “silent telephone war” against prank calls.

The game is to catch the person who may be calling after you’re talking.

We will be running our own unannounced phone-answering days.

Our tag line is “Black Funeral Home,” which may pay the ears of the caller.
