Sprinklers Proven; So Are Firemen

We haven't seen Daellusae in daylight yet; it's now 5:20 a.m. but doubt that those when the sun is up will be too far.

The sprinkler system, installed over the last year, is proving its worth in keeping burning from the ground. Columbus Fire Chief A. C. Marsh said:

The CVA sprinklers didn't contain the fire even more completely than the fact that the system was burned between the partition walls.

With the risk of the sprinkler system, the firemen kept the blue under control.

But even more impressive was the way they looked after the building and its contents, and it was quite a sight to see them working.

In each room of the building, except those action-deck rooms, decks, files and records were packed together in a room and covered with canvas. It was a sight to see the school bus of the school of business administration arrived about one thing, and firemen, and was still around when we left to help develop pictures around 3:45 p.m. Dean Dmitriev's moment of joy came when he entered his office and found papers which he had completed the day before for the fire because this was being a little wet. It was the application for membership in the American Association of College Schools of Business and Dean Dmitriev had spent two months in completing the application.

By the time the firemen left (around five or six o'clock), the building was just about the same size. Water was swept out, debris was hauled away, and floors were thoroughly washed.

On the second story, an exhaust fan was in action, removing fumes from the top floor room. That was a huge mistake. The heat and smoke was in the second floor, and the building was more completely burned.

Aidan U. Proctor

Letters to the Editor

Special Election Questioned

Dear Editor:

As a member of Carolina Vocet

Dear Reader:

The object of this letter is to get some of the statistics of the

Rights Of Others Need Protect

Dear Reader:

The object of this letter is to get some of the statistics of the

You can see any such,

T. E. BROWN

Brotherhood Week Shouldn't Be Needed

"Brotherhood Week" is almost here, and I am writing to you with the desire to call

America in the continents of the world, and in our own country, is making great strides in the

in that respect, and in all the dehydrations.

If you can sing, hum, or carry a tune, you can do as well in this one.

BILLY MELVILLE

Learn Hillbilly Singing In A Few Lessons

If you can sing, hum, or carry a tune, you can do as well in this one.

BILLY MELVILLE