Angel Flight Accepts Applications Of Girls

Angel Flight, the cord auxiliary of Aeromar Air Society in the Air Force ROTC, will begin interviews for new members on April 2. Girls interested in joining Angel Flight are asked to fill out an application and to return it, along with a written essay, to Capt. Patti Knight, Box 2290, Campus.

Application forms have been placed in the hands of the women's dormitories.

To be eligible for enrollment in Angel Flight, a girl must be a junior, sophomore, or second semester freshman, with a cumulative grade point rank of 2.5. Angels are selected on the basis of appearance, poise, intelligence, attitude, and interest.

Angel Flight was founded at Carolina in the spring semester of 1971. The objectives of the organization are to advance and promote air awareness in the Air Force; to obtain information concerning the military services; to aid the purpose of the Arnold Air Society, and to act as official hostesses for the AFROTC at the University of South Carolina in Carolina's social activities.

Members of Angel Flight meet at Thursday's at 4 p.m. and wear the Angel Flight uniform each Thursday. The uniforms are furnished by the Flight to members. Fees are $7.50 per year, and the initiation fee is $2.50.

Angel Flight, although a relatively new organization, is one of Carolina's most important student groups. Its members number several hundred.

Trash Cans Cause New Problems

If there's one thing that USC students dislike, it's trash cans.

Recently the campus has been flooded with a number of garbage bins, most of which do not fit into any standard trash disposal site. Many students have complained that they are not sure where to put their trash, and that it is not possible to find a place for it that will not attract the attention of the campus's human scavengers.

The problem is particularly acute in the College of Arts and Sciences, where the new enclosures are located. Many students have noted that the new bins are either too small or too large, and that they are not located in convenient places. Some students have even complained that they have been forced to walk long distances to dispose of their trash.

One student, who has been particularly affected by the new bins, said, "I am constantly having to find a place to put my garbage, and it is getting very frustrating. I would much rather have a properly located trash bin that is the right size."
