The next time someone tells you what he's going to do, ask him what he's done.

The things that are important to you are important to Weston Adams. And he's proven that every day since he's been in the House of Representatives: Consider the Taste. Even though he's an attorney, Weston Adams has consistently supported legislation that would prohibit liquor legislators from practicing while in the Public Service Commission and other regulatory agencies. In addition, he has worked to make the members of those agencies, making them more responsible to the people they serve.

Consumer Interests Weston Adams has been a leader in the fight to prohibit the Dairy Commission from fixing retail milk prices and has been a staunch supporter of the Uniform Commercial Code, which benefits both the businesses and the consumer.

The Environment Weston Adams has supported every piece of legislation that would protect and enhance our environment, including the Tidelands and Stormwater bills, and has proposed changes in the way our Wildlife Commission is chosen. The important S.C. League of Conservation Voters, by the way, has given him a rating of 96 on environmental issues. That's out of a possible 100.

Criminal Justice Weston Adams has taken a strong stand in favor of legislation that would provide for sale streets, equitable administration of justice, increased training and pay for law enforcement officers, strict penalties for drug pushers, and reform of our antiquated judicial system. (You should also know that his legal background includes service as an Associate Counsel for the Select Committee on Crime of the U.S. House of Representatives, investigating organized crime in the United States.)

Governmental Reform Since his earliest days in the House, Weston Adams has been an effective voice for governmental reform. He has supported legislation that would improve the process of government by limiting the terms of members of our state and national commissions and boards, and has thus helped the creation of a Government Accounting Office to serve as a watchdog over the expenditures of our tax dollars. And he has been a consistent advocate of measures that would provide for more efficient use of state revenues and thereby prevent tax increases.

And one more thing:

Weston Adams is in a unique position to know the people and problems of District 72, because he is a lifelong resident of the District. In fact, he has lived in six different locations in Columbia, and all of them have been in District 72.
