Christine Jorgensen plans USC lecture

Christine Jorgensen will deliver a public lecture at University of South Carolina at 7:30 p.m. Thursday in Carolina Coliseum. The lecture, sponsored by the University’s Student Government Association (SGA) Speakers Bureau, will be free to the public.

Jorgensen created a sensation 20 years ago when she surgically transformed into a woman receiving widespread attention from the press. Since her initial notoriety, Jorgensen continued to remain in the spotlight, with appearances in nightclubs, on television and Broadway and in summer stock. She will be speaking in Columbia on “Who Am I...Who Are You...How Do I Work at Being Me?” At the conclusion of the lecture, she will answer questions from the audience.

Jorgensen began lecturing soon after the 1967 publication of her book, Christine Jorgensen: A Personal Autobiography, which was later made into a film.

One of the primary concerns of her lectures is to educate parents and children concerning the medical history and the prognosis of gender identity problems—what symptoms to look for, what steps to take to correct the problem, what treatment is available and how to deal with society’s pressures.
