Women’s Quad

Construction making progress

By Juliet Rader

Progress is finally appearing amidst the dirt piles and trenches in front of the women’s quad. Herb Brinson, of Project Development, expects the project to be completed by mid-December.

“Every possible loophole is being worked out so, substantially, the project will be complete before the middle of December,” Brinson said.

The drainage piping that the construction crew had been concentrating on first are now in place and the workers have begun redesigning the quad. The McClintock phase includes building a patio and walks. The crew will then move on to landscaping in front of Sims, Wade Hampton and the center section of the quad from Sims to Greene Street.

“Some revisions have had to be made because of water pipes and catch basins interfering with construction. But this is standard for any landscaping situation,” Brinson said.

This problem, along with the fact that crew members were “tied up on Greene Street,” extended the completion date, Brinson said.

Crew members were diverted from the quad to complete the Greene Street mall project this past summer.

Broken water pipes that began the project last summer were replaced Aug. 1.

“Our men were tied up on Greene Street, then moved to the Women’s Quad. We put in drains and catch basins with their tops on them for water problems. The flooding problem around the grounds of Wade Hampton will be corrected,” Brinson said.

A copy of the finished architectural design layout is posted on the Sims lobby bulletin board.

According to Brinson, the estimated cost of the project, including extra shrubbery and other landscaping aids will exceed $50,000.
